06 How to address mental health support for you and your pharmacy staff

Follow these strategies to help your pharmacy maintain a well-adjusted workforce

The COVID-19 pandemic triggered a new wave of global mental health concerns following enforced closures of businesses and schools, as well as recommended isolation from societal events and travel restrictions.

Pharmacists, a subgroup of frontline healthcare workers, experienced effects to a greater extent than the general population. Pharmacies remained open as essential businesses while employees dealt with new procedures for testing and treating patients, staffing and supply shortages, additional cleaning and safety measures, and apprehension about their own well-being and that of their family and friends.

Studies show that the pandemic activated psychological distress among pharmacy workers, leading to increased levels of burnout, depression, anxiety, and sleeping disorders. As such, pharmacy owners and managers should implement support measures to preserve employee health and maintain service to the patient community. Mental health experts recommend the following strategies to mitigate lingering impact from COVID-19:

Take an assessment. The American Pharmacists Association (APhA) offers a free online screening tool, the Well-Being Index (WBI) for Pharmacy Personnel, which measures nine dimensions of mental distress. The WBI provides confidential scores and resources for each dimension. It takes five minutes to complete and may be repeated over time to track well-being. You don't have to be an APhA member to use the WBI.

Be an active leader. Set a good example for others by consistently tending to your own care. Additionally, ask staff members what matters most to them in their day-to-day routines. In doing so, you'll identify changes that could help alleviate stress and improve operations. Similarly, welcome discussions with employees about challenges they be facing at home (e.g., child or elder care) and how you may be able to accommodate workarounds or scheduling changes.

Extend resources. Establish policies and procedures for addressing mental health concerns. Employee benefits should include a referral pathway when needed. Consider offering staff access to telehealth counseling with licensed psychologists or therapists. Mindfulness training can also help pharmacists and staff focus on a specific task, such as prescription filling, to guard against medication errors.

Build mental resilience. You and your team members should take regular breaks throughout the day. To the extent possible, stick to 8-hour shifts so that employees don't feel compelled to sacrifice home-life commitments. Behind-the-counter personnel should have a quiet space to focus, make business calls, or check prescriptions. Away from work, you and your employees can revive mental health through any activity that is both stress-relieving and personally fulfilling (e.g., exercise, reading, listening to music, and connecting with friends).

Encourage open communication. Create a workplace culture where staff can express their worries without fear of pushback. In response, managers should regularly update workers on how their concerns are being addressed. For instance, group meetings may identify scenarios in which staff can request additional support when needed.

Above all, keep in mind that stress is a normal reaction to an infectious disease outbreak. At the same time, taking appropriate steps to minimize its effects will help your pharmacy maintain a well-adjusted workforce.

Easily find direct replacement numbers for products

We know how frustrating it is to come across a discontinued item in ABC Order. That's why we created two ways you can find a direct replacement, if one is available.

- 01 Search for your item and select All ABC Products on the left. The option to select the replacement product will be directly below the product tile, as shown below.

- 02 You can also find a link to the replacement product on the product detail page of the item you are searching for.
